

Drug and Alcohol Prevention

Making Healthy Choices

Project and Purpose: If children are to make healthy choices in life, they need to practice the art of making decisions and choices early. Students create a class book about their healthy choices.

Essential Question:

What are some healthy choices we can make to help stay away from drugs and alcohol?

materials

Way to post student ideas (i.e., chart paper and markers, SmartBoard, etc.)

Writing paper/lined paper

Pencils/pens

Construction paper

Crayons, markers, etc.

choice

decision

hobby

situation

PreK-2

Procedure:

Introduction:

1. Begin a discussion about decisions and choices. Use any/all of the following questions:
 - What are some decisions or choices you have recently made? Did you have to make a decision or choice today? Last week? In the past month?
 - Who helps you make those decisions?
 - When you have to decide something, what are some of the questions you ask yourself?
2. Continue the discussion by explaining that asking yourself questions is a good way to make healthy choices and good decisions. Make a list of questions students might think about when making decisions/choices. Be sure to include:
 - Is this harmful or good for me?
 - Will I get in trouble if I do this? Why?
 - Am I comfortable doing this or am I doing this because someone is “making me”?
 - What might happen if I make this choice or decision?

Notes:

Direct Instruction (I do):

1. Discuss how afterschool activities are usually a very healthy choice and help us to keep busy and stay away from possible bad situations.
2. Share one or two activities you participated in when in school and which ones you continue to do now. Talk about these as healthy choices and how you decided they would be good for you. Talk about how these activities are healthy choices that have helped you stay away from bad situations.

Guided Exploration (We do):

1. Ask students what they do to keep busy after school. Discuss how these hobbies and activities are important and positive pieces of their lives.
2. Ask them how these activities help them stay away from possible bad situations and making bad decisions like trying drugs and alcohol. Create a visible list for students to reference in the next section of the lesson.

Notes:

Independent Practice (You do):

1. Distribute writing paper and explain that they are going to create a class book about the healthy choices they make instead of choosing drugs or alcohol. Use the list generated by the class discussion for ideas.
2. Students may write a paragraph, a poem, or just a few lines. Books have illustrations, so make sure students know there is an opportunity to illustrate their writing.
3. Decide on a page limit for your age group: should each student write and draw on the same page? Should there be an opportunity for writing on one page and illustrations on another? Do what works for your class.
4. Have students work within the parameters of your school's writing program to complete their work.
5. When everyone has finished the pages, have students share their work with the class.
6. Decide on a title and a cover for the book and determine who will create the cover.

Conclusion:

Bind the materials in book fashion (there are many websites that offer advice on how to do this well). Consider sharing with other classes, the administration, and/or the Parent Association.
